Murphy-Johnson Controversy—Bat Nelson's Win at Fort Worth But a Few of the Items You Get in No Other Western Paper

MEETING OF NATIONAL LEAGUE MANAGERS TO BE STORMY SESSION

Murphy Thinks Pulliam Has Discriminated Against Cubs in Schedule and Will Lead Big Fight.

Chicago, Feb. 12.—The meeting of the National league managers here tonight will be anything but uneventful. The belief that has between President Charles W. Murphy of the Cubs, and President Pulliam and Gary Herriman is sufficient to cause a shake-up, but it will not be the only battle fought. Chicago has been made to feel that the schedule makers have treated the year's season unfairly, and that the Cubs will not be given the best of the schedule. Murphy will lead the fight, and he expects the schedule is drafted three years in advance of the season, and all managers will be asked to sign the schedule as it is. Murphy is expected to lead the Chicago club by the committee against a plan of protest and indignity, after the club officials had discussed the plan of the schedule committee, experts were called upon to formulate and defend the proposed schedule on its face. DENVER, COLORADO, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1909, SEVENTEENTH YEAR

All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my mother. I remember her prayers and they have followed me all my life.—Abraham Lincoln by Hugh O'Neill, Editorial Writer.

Abraham Lincoln: Born February 12, 1809

AFTER reading every available book and document of any authentic value on the life of Lincoln we confess the conclusion that only a man as great as Lincoln could sit in judgment on Lincoln's greatness. Criticism, in his case, is denied even the benefit of comparisons, because he faced a condition that was new to history, and dealt with it in a manner equally original. That he had risen by his own efforts from poverty to eminence was no more to his credit than it was to the credit of thousands of other men who had conquered similar difficulties. That he developed a serene statesmanship, without the precedents of training or experience, was matter for curiosity rather than admiration. For statesmanship is spontaneous to some minds and is not a science. Few of the great standings in history had the poorer aspect for actual appearance. His very slowness intimated in selecting successful partners, and yet Lincoln needs none of those recommendations to insure his immortality.

When he visited to Washington to succor Buchanan the "house divided against itself" had fallen in fulfillment of his prediction. At least seven states had actually "seceded" from the Union. The Abolitionists were appalled at the tragedy their agitation had precipitated. The Mayor of New York had advised that his city "secede" from the Union, a reply, contrary to the logical sense of his own policy, which implied that the city would remain at peace where there could be no peace. "Wendell Phillips" became even more bitter than Greeley. The states that had "seceded" were arrogant in their confidence; the states that remained were swept by panic; they appear now in retrospect storn, burdened and hopeless. The tradition of the South was a tradition of arms. The tradition of the North was one of commerce alleviated by the moral force of the church. The city alone in Washington, sounding a note which called for arbitration to allay its commerce and take to arms.

Certain Southern gentlemen called on Mr. Lincoln in the interests of the Peace conference. It is said of them that they were curious concerning this "uncommon" man from the West; supercilious concerning his attainments; confident in their own superiority. And Lincoln told them with a convincing simplicity which revealed a character quite different from that of Buchanan: "My course is as plain as a turnpike road. It is marked out by the Constitution. I am in no doubt in which way to go. And so they left him, a solitary and ungainly figure, the one available confident man in a rabble of opinion, a man who actually had "no doubt" as to whether he should guide his steps, a man who believed in God and the destiny of his own people."

Hitherto you find Lincoln little more than a politician, with a keen instinct for the trend of public opinion, and an intellect of unusual sanity. But shortly after that interview the politician disappears and Father Abraham takes his place, to remain forever in memory as one of "God's Vem." Assailed from all sides, taunted by the thinly veiled insults of his own Congress, sneered at and patronized alternately by McClellan, hindered by the conspiracies of his Cabinet, a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," he still remained patient, infinitely tolerant, gentle in reproof, a man miraculously consecrated to God, believing profoundly that He would yet redeem His children.

For no estate of Lincoln can be true that does not rise in his deep faith the source from which drew his enduring courage. It is not quite fashionably just now for men to publicly proclaim their belief in God; scholarship and science are supposed to have replaced "credulity"; one of Lincoln's biographers even apologizes for the "superstition" of the time that credited him with Divine inspiration; but, to understand Lincoln, we have to concede religion as the inspiration which held him steadily on to that road concerning which, in the beginning, he said "no doubt." And, whatever our own views may be, it is not as a good man, but as a merely great man, but as a man who believed authentically "in God the Father Almighty," through whose Abid he sought to save a nation or freedom, and did save it, that Abraham Lincoln has bequeathed his chief heritage to this nation.

The Story of Actor W. J. Ferguson Who Was on the Stage at the Time.

(By ARTHUR BENNETT)

HERE'S a shopworn joke that has rattled around in theatrical circles until it has long since outlived its usefulness, having for its central figure the man who carried a spear with Laura Keane.

was paralyzed by the calamity, and he was also the last Thespian who came in contact with John Wilkes Booth.

It was in the old Peabody hotel at Memphis in the winter of 1888 that it was my good fortune to first meet Mr. Ferguson. By some peculiar dispensation of Providence I was assigned by a Chicago paper to free lance it through the South and send in copy. Memphis was my first stopping place and in the reading room of the old Peabody hotel I was grinding away, more than half afraid that I was going to "fall down," and it was there I met Dr. Ferguson.

He was playing the lead in "Jim the Penman," a play much talked of then, and as he spent most of his time either reading or writing we struck up an acquaintance and, I am glad to say, a friendship that has lasted ever since.

"I have been more or less connected with the stage," said he, "as long as I can remember. I was born in Baltimore and my father and Mr. Ford, owner of Ford's theater in Washington, were close friends. After my father's death Mr. Ford employed me about the theater as call boy. I was just crazy to be an actor and spent all my time studying parts, but, of course, opportunity was a long time coming my way.

"Occasionally I was cast for a spare corrie or some other ultra-subordinate position but what my soul longed for was to be

"During the season in which President Lincoln was assassinated Miss Laura Keane was the star of our company. She was, besides being a brilliant actress, one of the most beautiful women I have ever known, and generous to a fault. She was always willing to help our youngsters out and more than once I confided to

"On the night of the tragedy, we were killed to play "Our American Cousin," a brief performance for Miss Keene, as it was to be her last appearance at that theater. The actor who had originally been cast for the part of Lieutenant Vernon, U. S. A., was taken suddenly ill, and at the last moment, as one might say, I was assigned to the part. You can imagine my feelings when I learned that Mr. Lincoln would be present.

"The theater was crowded by Washington's most fashionable set and everyone cheered as the presidential party appeared. I did not have to appear in the early part of the play, and Miss Keene, who was most particular in such matters, thought that she would better rehearse me in my part before I went on.

"We were standing in the wings together, going over my lines, the great actress coaching me as if I were a schoolboy learning his alphabet, when a pistol shot rang out. From where we stood I could see the president's box and immediately after the report I John Wilkes Booth leapt over the railing and down to the stage proper, a drop of some eight or nine feet, I should say. He fell to his knees but rose immediately and walked with a slight limp over toward where Miss Keene and I stood. His blood was pumping and his face was flushed. He looked at me, then glided to the actress and, putting out one hand, brushed her hair lovingly between my and out the stage entrance door. Then I heard a woman screaming. The whole house was in an uproar, and I have but a dim recollection of what happened afterwards. It is needless to say that our season closed then and there, and I never got an opportunity to play the part of Lieutenant Vernon, U. S. A."

This briefly is the story of the man who carried a spear with Learns from the story only living actor today who was an eye-witness, a stage, and a theatre manager.

A small, simple line drawing of a dog on a leash. The dog is facing left, looking towards the left edge of the frame. It has a dark collar with a small bell. A person's legs and feet are visible on the right, wearing shorts and shoes. The background is minimal, suggesting an outdoor setting.

My
Ex. State.
Our hired girl's too daggone rough; she's fust a big, old crank;

She seems to think she's human, 'er, or that I'll let her to spank!
I bet I'll have her sent away; jist wait!—I'll tell my dad;
She'll be discharged or else I'll go. I mean it, too—The mad.

If I pick frostin' off the cake she wants me with the beam,
An' when she scrubs the kitchen floor I can't go in the room,
She won't let Rover in the house; she says he ain't no good.
He ought to simply chaw her up; by Joe! I wish he would.

If I say "Mum," she grabs me quick to wash my mouth with soap.

As if I didn't tell you she takes an' ties me with a rope;
she won't give me no pie 'tween meals an' I can't have no jam;
she geet she gives me this if just a single door I slam.

It dad we'd run her off perhaps I'll go an' get a rope, she's actin' most outrageous an' it's time for her to stop;
she picks at me 'tween I'm a kid what's gentler an' small,

WILLIAM J. FERGUSON.

One of America's Longest Character Actors. He Was Playing at Ford's Theater When Lincoln Was Assassinated.

One of our most esteemed critics once said that Mr. Ferguson never disappointed his audience in failing to give them a finished performance. For years he has been a leading figure in the best New York productions, and today, after more than forty years of stage life, retains his place in the front rank as few have ever done.

Mr. Ferguson is the only actor living who witnessed the assassination of President Lincoln, when it took place in Washington on that fatal April night when it took the nation
